

Translation Policy

Translation Guidelines

All translations on READORA must:

- Be original works translated with proper authorization
- Maintain the original meaning and context
- Credit original authors appropriately
- Follow our quality standards

Copyright and Permissions

Translators must ensure:

- They have proper rights or permissions to translate the work
- The original work is eligible for translation
- All necessary licenses and agreements are in place
- Proper attribution is maintained throughout

Quality Standards

Translations should maintain:

- Accuracy to the original text
- Proper grammar and spelling
- Consistent terminology
- Cultural context where appropriate

Review Process

All translations undergo a review process to ensure quality and accuracy. This may include peer review, editorial review, and community feedback when appropriate.

Content Removal

We reserve the right to remove translations that violate copyright laws, our quality standards, or community guidelines. Translators will be notified of any such actions.

Translator Rights

Translators retain appropriate credit for their work while granting READORA the right to host and distribute the translations according to our terms of service.

Updates and Changes

This translation policy may be updated periodically. Translators will be notified of significant changes that affect their work or rights.

Last updated:12/07/2025